Here is another side -- a deeply hopeful and encouraging side -- of life in Iraq in the aftermath of its liberation. I say "another" because among some elements of the media there is a tropism toward bad news, negative stories, the belief that while we may have won the war we are "losing the peace." In fact, things are very much the opposite -- and in the end, the truth will out.

The New York Post
The Real Iraq
By AMIR TAHERI
July 17, 2003

July 17, 2003 -- Open up almost any American or European publication these days, and you'll be bombarded with grim news about "horrific" conditions in Iraq - and America's "poor handling" of the post-war reconstruction effort. All of which, it is claimed, is made all the more tragic - because President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair maliciously exaggerated the threat from Iraq. They may have won the war, but they're losing their peace.

Author and Middle East expert Amir Taheri spent several days on the ground in Iraq last week and found reality to be starkly different from what is so ubiquitously reported.

Here is a first-hand account of an Iraq that is rapidly moving forward in nearly every aspect of life - political, economic and cultural. And a people that, while understandably skeptical after decades of tyranny, is nonetheless hopeful - and grateful for their liberation.

- THE EDITORS

BAGHDAD, IRAQ

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. The daily Al Quds, another pro-Saddam paper, quotes from The Washington Post in support of its claim that "a popular war of resistance" is growing in Iraq. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts of Iraq, including the Kurdish areas and cities in the Shiite heartland, put up the star-spangled flag as a show of gratitude to the United States. "We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

THERE are two Iraqs today: One as portrayed by those in America and Europe who wish to use it as a means of damaging Bush and Blair, and the other as it really exists, home to 24 million people with many hopes and aspirations and, naturally, some anxiety about the future.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

Saddam is gone," says Mohsen Saleh, a geologist in Baghdad. "A man who is cured of cancer does not complain about a common cold."

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

"We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in Baghdad and other major cities, again giving Iraqis access to a forbidden cultural universe.

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Some teahouses, in competition to attract clients, offer satellite television as an additional attraction. Every evening people pack the teahouses to watch, and zap and discuss, what they have seen in an atmosphere of freedom unknown under Saddam. It may be hard for Westerners to understand the Iraqis' exhilaration at being able to watch television of their choice.

But this is a country where, under Saddam, people could be condemned as spies and hanged for owning a satellite dish.

Another symbol of newly won freedom is the multiplication of cellular and satellite phones. Most belong to returning exiles. But their appearance is reassuring to many Iraqis. Under Saddam, their illegal possession could carry the death penalty.

The portrayal of Baghdad as an oriental version of the Far West in Hollywood Westerns misses the point. It ignores the fact that life is creeping back to normal, that weddings, always popular in summer, are being celebrated again, often with traditional tribal ostentation. The first rock concert since the war, offered by a boys' band, has already taken place, and Iraq's National Football (soccer) Squad has resumed training under a German coach.

THERE are two Iraqs today: One as portrayed by those in America and Europe who wish to use it as a means of damaging Bush and Blair, and the other as it really exists, home to 24 million people with many hopes and aspirations and, naturally, some anxiety about the future.

"After we have aired our grievances we remember the essential point:

Saddam is gone," says Mohsen Saleh, a geologist in Baghdad. "A man who is cured of cancer does not complain about a common cold."

Here is another side -- a deeply hopeful and encouraging side -- of life in Iraq in the aftermath of its liberation. I say "another" because among some elements of the media there is a tropism toward bad news, negative stories, the belief that while we may have won the war we are "losing the peace." In fact, things are very much the opposite -- and in the end, the truth will out.

The New York Post
The Real Iraq
By AMIR TAHERI
July 17, 2003

July 17, 2003 -- Open up almost any American or European publication these days, and you'll be bombarded with grim news about "horrific" conditions in Iraq - and America's "poor handling" of the post-war reconstruction effort. All of which, it is claimed, is made all the more tragic - because President Bush and British Prime Minister Tony Blair maliciously exaggerated the threat from Iraq. They may have won the war, but they're losing their peace.

Author and Middle East expert Amir Taheri spent several days on the ground in Iraq last week and found reality to be starkly different from what is so ubiquitously reported.

Here is a first-hand account of an Iraq that is rapidly moving forward in nearly every aspect of life - political, economic and cultural. And a people that, while understandably skeptical after decades of tyranny, is nonetheless hopeful - and grateful for their liberation.

- THE EDITORS

"THE Iraqi Intifada!" This is the cover story offered by Al-Watan Al-Arabi, a pro-Saddam Hussein weekly published in Paris. It finds an echo in the latest issue of America's Time magazine, which paints a bleak prospect for the newly liberated country. The daily Al Quds, another pro-Saddam paper, quotes from The Washington Post in support of its claim that "a popular war of resistance" is growing in Iraq. Some newspapers in the United States, Britain and "old Europe" go further by claiming that Iraq has become a "quagmire" or "another Vietnam." The Parisian daily Le Monde prefers the term "engrenage," which is both more chic and French. This chorus wants us to believe that most Iraqis regret the ancien regime, and are ready to kill and die to expel their liberators.

Sorry, guys, this is not the case.

Neither the wishful thinking of part of the Arab media, long in the pay of Saddam, nor the visceral dislike of part of the Western media for George W. Bush and Tony Blair changes the facts on the ground in Iraq.

ONE fact is that a visitor to Iraq these days never finds anyone who wants Saddam back.

There are many complaints, mostly in Baghdad, about lack of security and power cuts. There is anxiety about the future at a time that middle-class unemployment is estimated at 40 percent. Iraqis also wonder why it is that the coalition does not communicate with them more effectively. That does not mean that there is popular support for violent action against the coalition.

Another fact is that the violence we have witnessed, especially against American troops, in the past six weeks is limited to less than 1 percent of the Iraqi territory, in the so-called "Sunni Triangle," which includes parts of Baghdad.

Elsewhere, the coalition presence is either accepted as a fact of life or welcomed. On the 4th of July some shops and private homes in various parts of Iraq, including the Kurdish areas and cities in the Shiite heartland, put up the star-spangled flag as a show of gratitude to the United States. "We see our liberation as the start of a friendship with the U.S. and the U.K. that should last a thousand years," says Khalid Kishtaini, one of Iraq's leading novelists. "The U.S. and the U.K. showed that a friend in need is a friend indeed. Nothing can change that."

In the early days of the liberation, some mosque preachers tested the waters by speaking against "occupation." They soon realized that their congregations had a different idea. Today, the main theme in sermons at the mosques is about a partnership between the Iraqi people and the coalition to rebuild the war-shattered country and put it on the path of democracy.

Even the radical Shiite cleric Muqtada Sadr now says that "some good" could come out of the coalition's presence in Iraq. "The coalition must help us stabilize the situation," he says. "The healing period that we need would not be possible if we are suddenly left alone."

Yet another fact is that all 67 of Iraq's cities and 85 percent of the smaller towns now have fully functioning municipalities. Several ministries, including that of health and education, have also managed to get parts of their operations going again. The petroleum industry, too, is being revived with plans to produce up to 2.8 million barrels of crude oil a day before the year is out.

To be sure, life in Iraq today is no bed of roses. But don't forget that this is an immediate post-war situation. There is no famine - in fact, the bazaars are more replenished with food than ever since the late 1970s - while food prices, having jumped in the first weeks after liberation, are now lower than they were in the last years of Saddam's rule.

MOST hospitals are functioning again with essential medical supplies trickling in for the first time since 1999. Also, some 85 percent of primary and secondary schools and all but two of the nation's universities have reopened with a full turnout of pupils and teachers.

The difference is that there no longer are any mukhabarat (secret police) agents roaming the campuses and sitting at the back of classrooms to make sure lecturers and students do not discuss forbidden topics. Nor are the students required to start every day with a solemn oath of allegiance to the dictator.

There has been no mass exodus anywhere in Iraq. On the contrary, many Iraqis, driven out of their homes by Saddam, are returning to their towns and villages.

Their return has given the building industry, moribund in the last years of Saddam, a boost. Iraqi exiles and refugees abroad are also coming home, many from Iran and Turkey. Last month alone the Iranian Red Crescent recorded the repatriation of more than 10,000 Iraqis, mostly Kurds and Shiites.

In Iraq today there are no "displaced persons," no uprooted communities and no long lines of war victims in search of a safe haven.

FOR the first time in almost 50 years there are also no political prisoners, no executions, no torture and no limit on freedom of expression. Iraq today is the only Muslim country where all shades of opinion - from the extremist Islamists of the Hezbollah to Stalinists, and passing by liberals, socialists, Arab nationalists and moderate Islamists - have full freedom to compete in an open market of ideas. Better still, all are now represented in the newly created Governing Assembly (Majlis al-Hukum). Iraq is also the only Muslim country where more than 100 newspapers and weeklies, representing all shades of opinion, appear without a police permit and are subjected to no censorship.

Much is made of power cuts, especially in Baghdad. But this is partly due to a 30 percent seasonal increase in demand because of air-conditioning use in temperatures that reach 115 degrees. In other cities - for example, Basra - the country's second-most populous urban center, more electricity is used than at any time under Saddam Hussein.

A stroll in the open-air book markets of the Rashid Street reveals that thousands of books, blacklisted and banned under Saddam Hussein, are now available for sale. Among the banned authors were almost all of Iraq's best writers and poets, whom many young Iraqis discover for the first time. Stalls, offering video and audiotapes for sale, are appearing in

The flower stalls along the Tigris are also making a comeback.

"Business is good," says Hashem Yassin, one florist. "In the past, we sold a lot of flowers for funerals and placement on tombs. Now we sell for weddings, birthday parties and gifts of friendship."

The free-market economy is making its first inroads into Iraq's socialistic system in a number of small ways. Hundreds of hawkers are offering a variety of imported goods and making brisk business by selling soft drinks, often bottled in Iran, and biscuits and chewing gums from Turkey.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON * The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

His co-chairman on the new commission is former Virginia Sen. Charles S. Robb, a moderate Democrat.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze

Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's

President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.

FORTUNE

Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive? —8the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.? —8Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law? —and another big one isn't in the offing? —Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON * The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

His co-chairman on the new commission is former Virginia Sen. Charles S. Robb, a moderate Democrat.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

Few Impartial on Panel Co-Chair

D.C. Judge Silberman, an aggressive partisan, helped absolve the Reagan White House in an intelligence probe.

By David G. Savage and Tom Hamburger
Times Staff Writers

February 11, 2004

WASHINGTON * The annual Halloween dinner here of the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars" brings together a small group of influential conservatives with long memories and strong views.

In 1984, the dinner featured President Reagan's spy chief, William J. Casey; a little-known Marine colonel named Oliver L. North, and a Washington lawyer who would have an impact on intelligence scandals for years: Laurence H. Silberman.

A few months later, Reagan named Silberman to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, and it proved to be a smart move. His dinner companion, North, had hatched the idea to secretly fund anti-Communist guerrillas in Nicaragua, and was convicted for his role in what became known as the Iran-Contra scandal.

Silberman wrote an opinion that voided the charges and effectively ended the prosecution of the Reagan White House.

Now, as the recently named co-chairman of a White House commission to look into intelligence lapses before the Iraq war, Silberman is once again in a position to review the failings of a Republican administration.

His co-chairman on the new commission is former Virginia Sen. Charles S. Robb, a moderate Democrat.

Silberman's past associations, from that private dinner with Washington's most militant cold warriors to his aggressive challenge of President Clinton both in the courtroom and behind the scenes, are raising questions about whether he was an appropriate choice to lead a dispassionate, impartial inquiry.

"He is fiercely partisan, pugnacious and very political," said Herman Schwartz, an outspoken, liberal law professor at American University. "He is an odd choice for a panel that is supposed to be above suspicion on a matter that is very important and potentially very partisan. Picking Silberman verges on the brazen. It's a thumb in the eye to those who were looking for a real investigation."

But if he is despised on the left, he is revered by many on the right. Michael Ledeen, a consultant to Reagan's National Security Council, praised Silberman's keen intellect, knowledge of foreign policy and intelligence issues and his "tough-minded, unsentimental" approach to any topic.

Silberman fit easily with the fervent anti-Communists who make up the "Pumpkin Papers Irregulars." They gather every Halloween to honor Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who exposed the State Department's Alger Hiss in the late 1940s when he revealed stolen files that were hidden in a pumpkin on his Maryland farm.

In his years as judge, Silberman has drawn bright, young conservatives as clerks, many of whom have emerged as key figures in the Bush administration.

Former Justice Department lawyer Viet Dinh, chief author of the USA Patriot Act passed after the Sept. 11 attacks, clerked for Silberman a decade ago.

"I think he is the most knowledgeable person around on the intersection of law and national security," he said of Silberman.

Before his judicial career, Silberman had served as the deputy U.S. attorney general in the Justice Department, which oversees the FBI; as U.S. ambassador to Yugoslavia; and, most recently, as head of the special court that reviews domestic spying on foreign agents.

"He has a good perspective of someone who has overseen intelligence gathering and used intelligence that has been gathered. Judge Silberman will call it as he sees it," Dinh said.

Silberman was asked Tuesday to respond to questions about his ability to serve impartially. He did not comment.

What is hard to find is someone in Washington who has a neutral view of Silberman.

His service in Republican administrations dates to 1969, when he joined the Nixon administration's Labor Department as a lawyer. He rose to the No. 2 job in the Justice Department under President Ford during the years when Donald H. Rumsfeld and Dick Cheney had top jobs in Ford's White House.

In the fall of 1980, when Ronald Reagan was running to unseat President Carter, Silberman and two other Reagan advisors met secretly with a man who claimed to have ties to the government in Iran, which was holding 52 Americans hostage.

The brief meeting later led to unproven allegations that Reagan's aides sought to delay the release of the hostages until after the November election.

After Reagan's victory over Carter, Silberman was put in charge of a transition team for the Central Intelligence Agency. But he lost out for the top job to Casey, Reagan's longtime friend.

In speeches and opinion articles, Silberman called for aggressive action against communists in Central America, and he slammed the Democratic majority in Congress for banning U.S. funds to support the Contras in Nicaragua.

In 1987, when Reagan was under investigation by an independent counsel, Silberman wrote an opinion striking down the Independent Counsel Act as a threat to the presidency. The Supreme Court overwhelmingly reversed him months later.

But Silberman had the last word in 1990. His opinion, joined by fellow Reagan appointee David Sentelle, voided North's conviction and also spared Reagan's national security advisor, John M. Poindexter. The lone dissenter was Judge Patricia Wald, a liberal whom Bush also named to the commission last week.

Former independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, in his book "Firewall: The Iran-Contra Conspiracy and Cover-Up," said he regretted not asking the judge to recuse himself and that he considered sending a transcript of Silberman's questioning of one of his deputies to the House Judiciary Committee, "which could review judicial misconduct."

During the Clinton years, Silberman was one of President Clinton's most aggressive tormenters. In 1998, he was part of a federal appellate panel that rejected the administration's claim of executive privilege to block the Secret Service from testifying about Clinton's relationship with former White House worker Monica S. Lewinsky.

Silberman's opinion ripped Atty. Gen. Janet Reno for acting in the "personal interest" of Clinton and it questioned whether the president, by allowing aides to criticize independent counsel Kenneth W. Starr, was "declaring war on the United States." Outside the courtroom, the judge also was working to foil the Democratic president, but only behind the scenes.

"He was unremittingly hostile to the Clinton administration and was advising me on how to attack them," recalled David Brock, a onetime conservative author who now criticizes the right.

As he wrote articles on "Travelgate," Whitewater and charges by Arkansas state troopers that the former governor had extramarital sex, Silberman was his "faithful advisor," Brock recalled. The judge, he said, encouraged him to be aggressive, and, on one occasion, suggested a specific tip involving the president's sex life to pursue.

As Brock fretted over whether to publish a story quoting troopers about then-President Clinton's sex life as governor, the judge strongly encouraged Brock to go ahead, he wrote in his 2002 book, "Blinded by the Right."

When he wrote critically about then-Sen. Paul Simon and other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee, he sent an advance copy to the Silberman home. The Silbermans, he wrote, were ecstatic about the case he made against Simon, a vocal critic of Silberman during the judge's confirmation hearing.

During this period, the Silberman house became "like a second home," Brock said. There, he was introduced to leading conservatives who met regularly with the judge and his wife.

While there, he learned that the judge and his wife were close to Cheney and his wife, Lynn.

This month, Cheney took a keen interest in the formation of the intelligence panel, making telephone calls to Capitol Hill to talk about potential nominees.

John Snow, Secretary of Schmooze
Officially, Snow heads the Treasury Department. Unofficially, he's President Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America.
FORTUNE
Monday, September 15, 2003

Treasury Secretary John Snow has many jobs. He's President Bush's chief spokesman on economic policy. He's also Bush's top advisor on money matters. But after nearly three decades as a corporate executive? —8the last 13 years as CEO of CSX Corp.? —8Snow plays an extra role as well. He is the Bush administration's top industrial spy.

When the President needs to know what the business world thinks about an issue or a proposal, he often turns to Snow. And Snow, in turn, keeps in constant contact with executives for this very purpose.

Snow is well suited to the task. In the mid-1990s he chaired the loudest mouthpiece for big business in Washington, the Business Roundtable. He's a natural conversationalist who gets along with a wide range of people and goes out of his way to stay in touch. Says John Dillon, a more recent chairman of the Roundtable and chair of International Paper: "John is available to talk about issues. And very very positive in terms of calling us and keeping us informed of the process."

Steve Friedman, a former co-CEO of Goldman Sachs and now the White House's economic-policy coordinator, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, a former energy executive, do their own schmoozing with business executives, of course. But Snow is clearly Bush's No. 1 pulse-taker on corporate America, a key constituency for a Republican President about to seek reelection.

Snow spends part of every week touching base with executives, often at the CEO level. His contacts have ranged from Steve Ballmer of Microsoft to Phil Condit of Boeing. Each of these CEOs separately urged Snow to be careful if he fiddles with the U.S.'s international tax laws. Big American manufacturers, they warned him, could be hurt if the federal government moves too quickly on that subject.

Now that the latest big tax-cut bill is law? —and another big one isn't in the offing? —Snow spends much more time listening than talking, especially with his pals in corporate suites. He allows them to beef about pending legislation, of course, but he also feels them out about business conditions in general. For instance, Treasury aides say, General Motors CEO Rick Wagoner drops by Snow's office whenever he's in D.C. During his latest visit, the two men discussed underfunded pension plans, labor negotiations, the state of inventories, GM's operations in China, and golf courses around Richmond, all of which Snow knew well. (Snow lives in Richmond; it's also where CSX is based.) "Snow loves to touch base with these people," a senior Treasury staffer says.

Snow doesn't always say yes to corporate petitioners, though. In fact, he often says no. A delegation of high-tech executives pleaded with him to dramatically reduce the tax rate on foreign profits, saying it would be an incentive for them to invest more money in the U.S. But after the meeting, Snow turned to an aide and said flatly, "This is terrible tax policy," and quashed the proposal. Snow also disappointed Intel CEO Craig Barrett, who wanted Treasury to endorse a moratorium on the expensing of stock options. "I'll leave that to the Securities and Exchange Commission," Snow said politely.

The President has also asked him to mediate a battle of high interest to corporate America between two of the House's most powerful and pugnacious Republicans, Speaker Dennis Hastert and Ways and Means Chairman Bill Thomas. The U.S. is on deadline to rewrite its international tax laws to make them comply with World Trade Organization rules. But to do so, major U.S. companies that sell manufactured goods abroad must lose millions of dollars in tax breaks. Two of the biggest firms that would be affected, Boeing and Caterpillar, are based in Hastert's home state of Illinois, so the Speaker is demanding legislation to compensate them for their losses. Thomas, the chamber's chief tax writer, is resisting. His version of the rewrite is already expensive and hard to pass. Snow has to find a compromise or else expose the U.S. to $4 billion in trade retaliation by the European Union. He's met several times with each lawmaker as well as with the CEOs of Boeing and Caterpillar while his staff develops long lists of options. "It is a solvable problem," he says with characteristic optimism.

Even Snow's leisure time is filled with intelligence gathering. His favorite golf partners include Tom Usher, the CEO of U.S. Steel, Chuck Lee, chairman of Verizon, and Rick Sharp, former CEO of Circuit City. Snow also talks to executives when he travels for business. This summer he sat at the center of a long conference table in a wood-paneled dining room of the Duquesne Club in downtown Pittsburgh. The club has been home away from home to the corporate elite of steel and railroads since the late 19th century and that day was no exception. Over a buffet breakfast, Snow talked candidly to a few dozen local business bigwigs, including Usher of U.S. Steel.

Snow told the executives what the Bush positions were on issues ranging from child tax credits to the value of the dollar. But he also took time to ask the folks around the table, "What are the local business conditions, inventories and the like?" And unlike other visitors from D.C., Snow really wanted to know.

Richard Blumenthal
706 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Blumenthal:

This letter is in further response to your Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request dated August 8, 2018 for access to George W. Bush Presidential records pertaining to Justice Kavanaugh. FOIA requests for George W. Bush Presidential records are processed and reviewed for access under provisions of the 1978 Presidential Records Act, as amended (PRA) (44 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2209), which incorporates the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. § 552) in substantial part.

We have completed processing approximately 871 electronic files of George W. Bush Presidential records related to the Blumenthal v. NARA FOIA litigation. Of this total, 439 electronic files have been exempted from release in whole or part in compliance with the restrictions of the PRA and applicable FOIA exemptions, which specify what material may be released to the public. All necessary steps were taken to segregate and release non-exempt information. The 439 electronic files restricted from access, in whole or in part, are listed along with the exemption categories below. Some electronic files may be restricted under more than one category. The remaining 463 electronic files are available, in whole or in part.

P5 - 276 electronic files
P6/(b)(6) - 232 electronic files
(b)(7)(f) - 1 electronic file
PRM - 66 electronic files

A list of the PRA restrictions and FOIA exemptions, as well as a copy of the finding aid that describes the processed material is attached.

At this time, you have the right to file an administrative appeal of any George W. Bush Presidential records responsive to your FOIA request that have been withheld under a restriction category of the PRA, 44 U.S.C. §2204(a). The appeal must be submitted in writing to the Director, George W. Bush Library and Museum, 2943 SMU Boulevard, Dallas, TX 75205. You should also include a copy of your original request and our denial. Both your appeal letter and the envelope should be clearly marked "PRA/FOIA Appeal." To be considered timely, your appeal must be postmarked or electronically submitted within 90 calendar days from the date of this letter.

Since these are Presidential records administered in accordance with 44 U.S.C. §§2201-2209, NARA must notify the former and incumbent Presidents prior to the release of any information in response to this appeal. Once an appeal determination is made and the notification period has passed, we will contact you.

If you would like to discuss our response before filing an appeal to attempt to resolve your dispute without going through the appeals process, you may contact our FOIA Public Liaison John Laster for assistance at: Presidential Materials Division, National Archives and Records Administration, 700 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, Room G-7, Washington, DC 20408-0001; email at libraries.foia.liaison@nara.gov; telephone at 202-357-5200; or facsimile at 202-357-5941.

If you are unable to resolve your FOIA dispute through our FOIA Public Liaison, the Office of Government Information Services (OGIS), the Federal FOIA Ombudsman's office, offers mediation services to help resolve disputes between FOIA requesters and Federal agencies. The contact information for OGIS is: Office of Government Information Services, National Archives and Records Administration, 8601 Adelphi Road – OGIS, College Park, MD 20740-6001; email at ogis@nara.gov; telephone at 202-741-5770; toll free at 1-877-684-6448; or facsimile at 202-741-5769.

Due to the high public interest in these requests, responsive records are posted on our website as they become available; accordingly, no fees are required.

If you wish to order copies or need any further assistance, please contact our staff at 214-346-1557 or gwbush.library@nara.gov. Your FOIA case log number is 2018-0263-F. Please have this number accessible for reference during any future contact concerning this case.

Sincerely,

Access

Collection is open to all researchers. Access to George W. Bush Presidential Records is governed by the Presidential Records Act (PRA) (44 USC 2201) and the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (5 USC 552, as amended) and therefore records may be restricted in whole or in part in accordance with legal exemptions.

Copyright

Documents in this collection that were prepared by officials of the United States government as part of their official duties are in the public domain. Researchers are advised to consult the copyright law of the United States (Title 17, USC) which governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Provenance

Official records of George W. Bush's presidency are housed at the George W. Bush Presidential Library and administered by the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) under the provisions of the Presidential Records Act (PRA).

Processing by

Staff Archivists, 2018. Previously restricted materials are added as they are released. Last Modified: 12/18/2018

Scope and Content

The materials in FOIA 2018-0263-F[4] are a selective, not necessarily all inclusive, body of documents responsive to the topic of the FOIA. Researchers should consult the archivist about related materials.

FOIA 2018-0263-F[4] requested previously unprocessed materials related to emails sent or received by Brett Kavanaugh containing the terms Manuel, Manny, or Miranda between July 2003-April 2004.

This FOIA primarily contains emails containing news articles, public opinion polls, excerpts from the Congressional Record, as well as announcements of personnel changes and judicial nominations from the George W. Bush Administration. Additional material for release includes routine scheduling emails, briefing papers for public presidential events, correspondence from members of Congress, as well as drafts of the acknowledgements portions of President George W. Bush's remarks and statements.

System of Arrangement

The materials in FOIA 2018-0263-F[4] are a systematic body of documents responsive to the topic of the FOIA. Researchers should consult an archivist about related materials.

Documents responsive to this FOIA were found in these collection areas – George W. Bush Presidential Electronic Records.

The Executive Office of the President (EOP) instance of the Electronic Records Archive (ERA) contains electronic records created or received by President George W. Bush. These records are stored in Search and Access Sets (SAS) that represent their originating computer program, such as Exchange Email or the Worker and Visitor Entry System (WAVES). In addition to records captured from the White House's electronic systems, EOP-ERA also contains records from the home and shared drives used by White House staff.

The following is a manifest of electronic records processed in response to FOIA 2018-0263-F[4].

ERA Sensitive

The records included here are George W. Bush presidential records reproduced from holdings of the National Archives and Records Administration.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization.

Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, May 7th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 474 in the EEOB.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization.

Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, May 7th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 474 in the EEOB.

Includes people on tours (Jacob not on tour per Advance; others were not listed); add Mayor of Poway, and "state" officials to try to get everyone else. Chris, could you run a compare? (I saved over my version or I would do it).

Remarks to Off-Duty Firefighters and Volunteers

November 4, 2003

Draft #6

- I have just seen the great harm that the fires have caused throughout Southern California. I have also seen the great strength and character of the people of this area in the face of adversity. The people of Southern California have shown courage, and concern for one another. And you are in the thoughts of people all across America.
- I thank Governor Davis, Governor-elect Schwarzenegger, Secretary Veneman, Under Secretary Mike Brown of the Department of Homeland Security, Mayor Dick Murphy of San Diego, Mayor Michael Cafagna of Poway, Chairman Greg Cox of the San Diego County Board of Supervisors, and all the Members of Congress, leaders of Tribal nations, and state and local officials here today for their strong leadership during this difficult time. I also thank the brave first responders, rescue workers, volunteers, emergency managers and military personnel who have saved many lives in the last two weeks. I appreciate Bill Clayton, Captain Mike Simpson, Chief Jeff Bowman, Chief Bill McCammon, and Chief Ernie Mitchell taking the time to brief me on the fire during my visit. And above all, I thank each of you, and the more than 16,000 other firefighters who have faced the flames in defense of many Southern California communities.
- All of you are part of an army that has fought fierce wildfires across the West. The work you do is always hard, and often heroic. You have the respect of all your fellow citizens, in this state and beyond. Your comrade, Steve Rucker, lost his life last week. Steve's fire chief said of him, "He wasn't sent there. He asked to go." All of us honor the memory of a brave man.
- These fires are among the largest and most severe in California history. I have declared major disasters for Los Angeles, San Diego, San Bernardino, Riverside, and Ventura Counties. FEMA is working closely with local officials to help the people of Southern California respond and recover. And the Small Business Administration is providing the vital assistance that families and businesses need to repair and rebuild.

- Southern California is passing through a very difficult time. Government at all levels is responding with needed resources. And the people of this state are responding with goodness and generosity. I am grateful to all of you for your professionalism, your incredible stamina, and your exemplary service in an hour of great need.

FYI - I sent these to Gretchen, but thought you should have them too. I have other NSC people looking at them too - they'll let me know first thing in the morning if there are problems with any of them.

Thanks!

I am no phoneticist, but I would propose the following:

Manzanillo (mahn-za-NEE-oh)

Carlos Manuel de Cespedas (CAR-los man-WELL day cess-pay-DAHS)

Dr. Oscar Elias Biscet (OSS-car el-EE-yas be-SET)

Marta Beatriz Roque (MARR-ta bay-ya-TREEZ ROW-kay)

Leonardo Bruzon Avila (lay-yo-NAR-dough BREW-zone AH-vee-la)

I think we usually put Deputy Secretary Steven Law, Department of Labor.
Maybe Under Secretary Asa Hutchinson, Department of Homeland Security [Under Secretary from Border and Transportation Security].

It's one of several long-standing problems with systems integration in the law enforcement arena, and is particularly galling since it emerged when the FBI and the Border Patrol worked for the same Cabinet Secretary. Now that they work for different Cabinet secretaries, it will be even harder to fix.

We'll get Scott some points this morning.

Records Gap Leaves Borders Vulnerable (WPost/AP)

Report Says U.S. Border Patrol Won't Get Complete FBI Fingerprint Files for Years

The Washington Post/AP, March 3, 2004

The United States remains vulnerable to infiltration by known criminals and terrorists because of chronic delays in making millions of FBI fingerprints available to the Border Patrol, Justice Department investigators reported yesterday.

It probably will take at least four more years for the FBI and Border Patrol systems to be combined in a way that would allow for a quick, automated check of fingerprints for the 1 million illegal immigrants who are caught each year, Justice Department Inspector General Glenn A. Fine determined.

That means thousands who could be prosecuted for crimes or detained as security risks will be returned to their home countries, free to try to reenter the United States, the report found.

"We believe this continues the significant risk that aliens who should be detained . . . instead will be released because Border Patrol agents will not learn of their significant criminal or deportation history," Fine said in the report.

The report is only the latest to find fault with U.S. efforts to secure airports, seaports and border crossings in the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. It was released the same day President Bush marked the first anniversary of the creation of the Homeland Security Department, saying progress is being made.

The FBI's fingerprint database contains about 43 million 10-finger sets of known criminals' prints. Ten-finger sets are considered superior because police often find only a single print at a crime scene. Although Border Patrol agents can check detained people against the FBI's database now, the process is slow, and the agents must select out those to be checked.

The Border Patrol's separate fingerprint system contains about 6 million two-finger sets of prints and is focused on catching those who repeatedly cross borders illegally. A second Border Patrol database contains an unspecified number of 10-finger sets of deported and criminal aliens.

Even with these limitations, from January 2002 to April 2003 the Border Patrol caught 4,820 people who were wanted for criminal offenses and 3,440 from countries thought to pose security risks to the United States, the Justice Department report said.

The problems with the current system were underscored by the case of Victor Manuel Batres, who was stopped by Border Patrol agents twice in January 2002 but was returned twice to Mexico without having his fingerprints checked against the FBI files. Had the agents done so, they would have discovered he had a long criminal history and could have turned him over to state or federal prosecutors.

Instead, Batres made it across the U.S.-Mexico border illegally a third time in 2002 and rode freight trains to Klamath Falls, Ore., where he raped two Roman Catholic nuns and killed one of them, Sister Helen Lynn Chaska, 53. Batres is serving a life sentence after pleading guilty to murder and rape.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds."

But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary."

It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats.

The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue.

The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words."

Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized.

Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves."

Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion.

"We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

I think we usually put Deputy Secretary Steven Law, Department of Labor.
Maybe Under Secretary Asa Hutchinson, Department of Homeland Security [Under Secretary from Border and Transportation Security].

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization.

Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, May 7th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 474 in the EEOB.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization.

Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, May 7th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 474 in the EEOB.

Dr. Zahi Hawass

Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare
artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures
Of Ancient
Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization.

Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, May 7th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 474 in the EEOB.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization.

Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, May 7th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 474 in the EEOB.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, May 7th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 474 in the EEOB.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.

1600 PENN BOOK CLUB

Presents

Dr. Zahi Hawass
Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities for Egypt
and National Geographic Explorer-in-Residence

The world's foremost expert on Egyptology will review his book

'Hidden Treasures of Ancient Egypt': Unearthing the Masterpieces of Egyptian History

With its 120 exquisite full-color photographs and enlightening commentary on the rare artifacts, many never before featured in a publication, Hidden Treasures Of Ancient Egypt will delight Egyptophiles and history buffs and will shed new light on some of the great mysteries of this ancient civilization. Attendees need NOT have read the book to benefit from the author's comments and the discussion to follow.

The event is to be held Friday, April 30th, from 3 PM until 4 PM in Room 472 in the EEOB.

All WHO/OVP Staff is invited.
